STABLE ISOTOPE AS NATURAL REACTION PROBES IN BIOREMEDIATION

DR. ELIZABETH EDWARDS
University of Toronto
Department of Chemical Engineering & Applied Chemistry
200 College Street
Toronto, ON M5S 3E5 CANADA
(416) 976-3506
elizabeth.edwards@utoronto.ca

CO-PERFORMER: Barbara Sherwood Lollar

Compound specific stable isotope fractionation in combination with careful analyses of contaminant transformation reaction substrates and products in microbial systems can provide a very useful way to explore novel metabolic pathways and constrain reaction mechanisms. Several examples of the application of stable isotope fractionation to investigate biodegradation pathways will be provided.